I received this as a gift. I was thrilled to have a bluetooth headset instead of catching wired headphones on things. The earbud wire clips very quickly were lost. This doesn't impair functionality, but without them taming the length of earbud cord, I have a length of wire on either side of my neck like wings. Not very pretty. Sound quality is ok. When I use it to talk to people on the phone, I get common complaints that it is difficult to hear me clearly. Music battery length is about 9 hours. Since almost every headset I find on is only rated for 10 hours, that's not bad. The band around the neck is small and flexible, hardly noticeable even when laying down. No problem there. The LED ring around the button flashes every few seconds when the headset is on. Not only do I find this unnecessary, it is WAY too bright--definitely attracting attention around other people and an annoyance in the dark. Slight cracks developed along the underside of the left side. The coating underneath the left headset arm bubbled a bit. I've used it pretty heavily. After about eight months, suddenly the left earbud only functions intermittently. The right seems ok, but the left will play audio regularly, or quietly, or loudly, or distortedly, shifting between those states randomly. There are only three controls, not counting the power switch: the play/pause/answer button and the volume rocker (press to change to next or previous track, hold down to adjust volume). Most other headsets provide more control. All too often, music does not resume after interrupted by an audio alert or a phone call. Not sure if that's the headset or a software problem on my phone, though. Charging is fairly quick, but annoying simply because the instructions specify to unplug it when charged--you can't just leave it plugged in overnight, but should monitor it. A huge irritation is the bluetooth connection. I can walk about ten feet away from the phone. For some reason, putting it in my pocket can result in audio cutting in and out. If I'm outside and the phone is in my pocket, the connection is very poor, and sometimes completely disconnects. Very frustrating!

Watch Video Here: <http://www..com/review/R99HKARXRWLLLI>I'm not sure who makes or whose company is licensing this headphone from a foreign manufacturer, but for a pair of neckphones that's currently selling for under $20, there very little to complain about. First up, the HV-800 are a consumer-grade audio device. These are a pair of wireless neckband or neckphones that also features an inline mic to answer phone calls. Because the ear piece is designed to be pushed into the earcanals as opposed to just sitting inside the earlobe, the sound is a lot more dramatic. If you're keeping the neckphone sitting on your shoulder as a necklace but already paired with a phone, these headphones will vibrate and have a slight chime to it to let you know that you have an incoming call. The manufacturer states that the phones have: * Bluetooth 4.0 radio built in * Noise reduction and Echo cancelling * Magnetic earphone storage * Feather weight at 32g * AptX for reducing a loss frequency This is a steal for $20. A STEAL.

The HV-800 is an OK sounding, without AptX, headset that offers good call quality and just OK sound quality for music without AptX. The thing is, at the current MSRP, these are probably some of the least expensive headphones available that offer Aptx capability, and if you have a device that supports AptX, they may be at least worth checking out. The design, the around the neck controller with semi-detachable earphones has become a sport headphone staple in recent years. The design is utilitarian and works quite well to keep your earphones, if they pop out when you exercise, from getting tangled or otherwise lost. It also makes for easy removal if you work in say, an office area where people stop at your desk frequently. Setup is fairly simple, and be aware that these headphones are WIRELESS over Bluetooth ONLY. There is no wired option. The first time you flip the power switch, the headphones are in pairing mode. Simply turn BT on with your device and pair to the HV-800. You can now stream sound over BT, including calls. Call quality overall is not bad. My chat partners are able to hear me without issue, and I can hear them. In terms of music, without using AptX, these sound disappointing. The bass is over accentuated and the mids get muddy. With AptX playback, they still don't sound audiophile grade/fantastic, but they do sound good at this price point. I would say that if you don't have AptX capability, and you are looking for good sound, these are likely not for you. Overall, the value is there, but the sound quality without AptX just isn't there.
